The European Public Policy conference of 2019 seeks to understand the double edged sword, that is technology. The fact that it is so ubiquitous, makes it futile to fight it. We must rather work towards coexisting with technology and that can be done best, by understanding areas where there is an intersection between technology and society.

Addressing this problem by focusing on 3 areas, the EPPC hopes to spark a discussion on these issues and discuss the problems that may arise and the solutions needed, to combat the intersection of tech and society.

The 3 day event will begin with a keynote address on Friday, followed by additional presentations, panels and discussions between panelists and attendees on the Saturday and Sunday. Through these discussions, we believe that even solutions to problems that were not on the agenda will come forth, making the event an excellent opportunity for tech and policy enthusiasts alike.

We would like you to join us, and most of all: we actively encourage you, with your innovative ideas, to help us discover the opportunities that the intersects of tech and policy hold.
